Obama leads all comers, $60 \%$ think Palin cannot beat him

Raleigh, N.C. - Despite Sarah Palin's assertion in a recent interview that she can defeat President Obama in 2012, three-fifths of Americans disagree with her optimism. Even Republicans are barely sure she can pull it off, 48-37. Indeed, she does worst, as usual, of the four current frontrunners and almost as badly as a little-known dark horse in an early look at the national popular vote. Only one of the five does as well as a generic Republican, but Obama would be helped against him if New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg were to make a third-party bid.

American voters just barely prefer, by a 48-47 margin, to re-elect Obama over an unnamed Republican opponent. He does get some support from those who disapprove of his job performance-overall, that rating stands at 47-50, with independents at 46-48, but unaffiliateds pledge to re-elect him by a 49-43 margin. $13 \%$ of Democrats plan to cross party lines, to only $8 \%$ of Republicans in Obama's corner.

The only named Republican to match the generic partymate is Mitt Romney, who trails Obama only 46-47. The two tie with independents at $43 \%$, while the president tops the others by two to 16 points. Mike Huckabee is next closest overall, lagging 45-48, followed by Newt Gingrich’s 43-49 deficit. Bringing up the rear are Palin, down 42-51, and Florida’s Senator-elect Marco Rubio, at 37-48. Palin and Rubio are the only two against which Obama earns more Republican support than they do Democratic votes, though each Obama and Gingrich pull $10 \%$ crossover support. Twice as many voters have no opinion of Rubio as the next least known, Huckabee and Romney.

If Bloomberg were to make his flirtation with an independent candidacy a reality, his $11 \%$ would make Obama's lead over Romney 44-38. Bloomberg dips into Romney’s support across the board, but particularly among independents, earning $22 \%$ to Romney's $32 \%$ and Obama's $36 \%$. But almost half the Democrats who favored Romney in the twoway now go to Bloomberg. The mayor even nicks Romney's own GOP support, earning 9\% and pulling Romney down to $77 \%$ from $87 \%$, with Obama still at $7 \%$ from $9 \%$.

PPP surveyed 707 American voters from November $19^{\text {th }}$ to $21^{\text {st }}$. The survey's margin of error is $+/-3.7 \%$. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.
